

Journey to the Unknown

Watching my ship sink
Into the depths of the ocean,
I feel the despair in my heart.
Reminding me of the home I left,
Where everything I ever worked for
And cared for has gone.
Not swalled up by waters
But devoured by flames of fire.

*Nothing left to live for,
Nothing left behind.
No-one to miss me,
No-one to cry.*

I thought I could find a place to hide.
I put on glasses to shut out the pain.
But there is no hiding,
The pain is too real.
The journey's been hard,
The storms overwhelming.
Now having survived, I discover
I've travelled this far to find me.

*Everything left to live for,
By letting go of the past.
Walking into the future
Finding myself at last.*

Joan Humphreys

If you have some poetry or an article you would like to share please email to admin@inspirationalfriends.com or post
it to Inspirational Friends Ltd 52 Hatch
Ride, Crowthorne, Berks. RG45 6LB